I have researched dozens of brands, and after a 20+ year career in healthcare, I have compiled the most. Fjallraven Cape Farewell Freedom, 30L 1809 Soft Suede. First Aid Kit Replacement Bag: I am sending this item back. I love the moleskin on the front side, but this bag just doesn't fit the conditions that I use it for. It is always in a pocket in my back pack and I use it only as a back pack and have never even tried it in a bag. The strap is so short that I have never been able to get it to fit comfortably on my shoulder. The bottom of the bag I like for a cooler. It gives enough room for the ice pack to fit in there. I am not very pleased with this bag for those uses. This Backpackers, or something like it, is good for an overnight trip. If your casual weather just needs the ability to keep your gear in place over night or if you need a pack for a 3-4 day trip with plenty of pockets to organize all your gear. Then, there's the issue of packing for the wilderness and the fact that a day hike or a weekend trip may require more than a day's worth of supplies. All that gear and the weight of the gear is another important consideration. The Fjallraven Cape Fare
